The puzzle solutions were usually obvious, the only difficulty was the random results from the physics. Nothing to bad, just a bit frustrating.

I got about 1/2 hour of gameplay for it's $.54USD cost. It's close to one dollar per hour of gameplay.

Nothing really wrong with the game, nothing really stands out about it.

If you like simple physics puzzles, go ahead and buy it on sale.. Short, but still very fun. The graphics are nice and have a machine shop feel. The mechanics are well implemented and do not feel like they need much more work. A lot of puzzle games seem to have a student project feel to them, which isn't always bad, but this one feels like a professionally made game.. The concept is fun, the graphics simple but pleasing. However, there are still some bugs to some levels (e.g. 21) where you are completely at the mercy of the physics randomly giving you the correct outcome. With a bit of tweaking, this could be a great little puzzle game. I'd wait until the bugs are worked out to purchase.. So for starters, I did a video review and you can watch it here: <https://youtu.be/VtFoppkN8RXc>

Now for the written review, I'd have to say that as of now, I can't recommend this game as it stands but since you will be updating the game and since I have seen what you are capable of making on your YouTube channel, I will give a thumbs up recommendation.

Pros:

- Beautiful graphics
- Nice main menu music
- Soothing dissolve sound for the items melting

Cons:

- The "You Passed" sound could be something less "dingy?"
- Main menu and level select menu have low fps compared to actual gameplay even when on the lowest settings.
- The physics aren't consistent. This gets really irritating around level 17 and up.
- The right bomb doesn't seem to give any real push on level 22.

Level 22 is the furthest I've gotten so far so I can't review passed that.

Overall, I would give this a solid 7/10 gameplay-wise. I think this is worth it with the upcoming updates considering this is only $1($0.59 for sale).
